

Aton International, Inc. Becomes a Woman-Owned Small Business

Los Altos, California, USA - August 28, 2003 - Aton International, Inc., Specialists in Device Integration, Data Access and Data Transformation, today announced its CEO, Constance Kobylarz, has purchased additional shares of the privately held company from its founder, Charles Wilde and now holds majority ownership in the company.

Since becoming the chief executive in August 2001, Ms. Kobylarz has led the transformation of the company from software consulting to mobile software product development. She spearheaded the development of closer ties with key technology partners including Microsoft and HP.

"Two years ago, we began shifting company resources into a business area that we anticipated would have substantial growth - enterprise use of mobile devices and device integration with legacy systems. We are continuing to execute on that business plan. I am confident that Aton International is on the right track to see continued growth over the next several years," Ms. Kobylarz commented.

Aton International, Inc. <www.aton.com>, has been assisting organizations for the past 20 years to seamlessly merge devices and systems for reliable data delivery. The company offers products and services designed to meet the device integration, data access and data transformation needs of original equipment manufacturers, enterprise application integrators and software developers. Our software products offer cost-effective, reliable solutions for host access from Pocket PC devices, desktops and servers which can be used off the shelf or incorporated into custom applications. Our services team helps OEMs integrate a wide array of devices and develop software for high tech products.

###

For more information, press only:

Constance Kobylarz, CEO, Aton International, Inc. 650-938-9328, constance [at (@)] aton.com